Mayor Of Bamberg Begs Jewish Handful Of "Fellow-Citizens" Not To Condemn Their Townsmen

"We are not accusing anybody," said Isaac Rosenberg. "We know there are only a handful who don't want to leave us in peace." Mr. Rosenberg is the leader of the tiny Jewish community in this 1,000-year-old Franconian city. It is one of the most beautiful cities in Germany — and one of the most peaceful.

In the Middle ages Bamberg enjoyed fame and importance throughout Europe. It was the seat of a bishop-elector, one of the bishop-princes in the Holy Roman Empire entitled to take part in choosing the Emperor, says Arthur J. Olsen, of the New York Times. It was also a commercial center and the burial place of a Pope. In the machine age it failed to keep pace.

Bamberg today is a provincial city of 77,000, lying off the hard-beaten track of West German life, preserved in its harmonious mixture of Gothic, Renaissance and baroque beauty by its very obscurity.

Last month Bamberg sprang into the headlines around the world. The placid old city, whose Jewish community counts seventy-one members, became the site of a vicious anti-Semitic smear action.

It began on a Sunday morning, June 13, when Mayor Theodor Mathieu and thirty Bambergers gathered to unveil a monument at the place on Willy Lessing Strasse where the town synagogue once stood.

The building was destroyed on "Crystal Night" in 1938. A Bamberg Jew named Willy Lessing fought the hoodlums on that anti-Semitic rampage, in which the Nazis shattered the windows of shops owned by Jews, and paid with his life for his courage.

The Town Council did not beat the publicity drums for the unveiling, as the small size of the crowds indicated. Like most other West Germans twenty years after the fall of the Third Reich, Bambergers do not have much time to think about Jews — favorably or otherwise.

On that morning of the unveiling a majority of the population would have been hard put to say whether a Jew lived in the town. Isaac Rosenberg is a small businessman known only to his circle of friends and customers.

A few minutes before the ceremony was to begin, shocking news was passed to Mayor Mathieu. A swastika had been daubed in red paint on the base of the memorial stone still swathed in a sheet, says the New York Times. The granite was scrubbed, the ceremony went on and the small crowd quietly dispersed. No one wanted to make a big thing of the defacing.

Twenty-four hours later an American family, vacationing in Europe, went to the old Jewish cemetery in Bamberg to pay their respects to an ancestor buried there.

They found twenty-five gravestones smeared with red, brown, and white paint — swastikas, the S.S. (elite guard) lightning insignia and anti-Jewish taunts, "Six million but too few," for example. That taunt was an allusion to the number of the Nazis' Jewish victims.

The American family left the cemetery, left Bamberg; and no one knows now who or where they are. Behind them they left a city in a state of shock. In quiet Bamberg, perhaps, the most piously Roman Catholic of all German cities, it was hard to believe that anyone could feel so strongly about Jews.

Bambergers have since learned that there are such people in their midst. Perhaps only three of four. Perhaps more. One is known to be a young man fast of foot. The hate artists have struck again, and again, and none has been caught although citizens' vigilante teams patrol the streets of Bamberg at night.

A monument in the center of town, raised in honor of a prominent non-Jewish Bamberger, was found one morning covered with red paint and with a placard affixed to it saying: "We shall continue."

A young man had daubed the door of the Jewish community center on Willy Lessing Strasse. He out-ran the two citizens who were guarding the building.

Bamberg's reaction to these outrages was stronger even than its indignation nine years ago, when six American soldiers raped the fifteen-year-old daughter of a leading citizen.

The city flew flags at half staff. It called in special details of the Bavarian state police and the federal criminal police — West

Sharett: A Chief Architect Of The State Of Israel, First Foreign Minister, Second Prime Minister, Dynamic Pleader In The Embassies, Leader To U.N. Membership, Scholar, Polished Linguist, Man Of Wit, Charm And Urbane Courtesy, Mourned And Cherished Around The World

Moshe Sharett, former Premier of Israel, died of cancer in Jerusalem at the age of seventy. His death was announced in a joint statement by the Government, the World Zionist Organization, and the Knesset (Parliament), says the New York Times. Mr. Sharett was chairman of the World Zionist Executive and served uninterruptedly in the Knesset since Israel was established in 1948.

"The Jewish people have been bereaved of a leader of the state, a pilot of the movement and a teacher of the nation," the joint announcement said.

Mr. Sharett, seriously ill for a long time, was readmitted to hospital after his condition suddenly worsened. He fell into a coma the next day. In his will, opened in the presence of his family at his death-bed, Mr. Sharett requested that they refrain from announcing his death by posting mourning notices in the street. He also requested no eulogies during the funeral and interment. Mr. Sharett's body lay in state in the courtyard of the Jewish Agency building in Jerusalem throughout one day. The Israeli President Zalman Shazar, and Premier Levi Eshkol were the first of an all-night series of guards of honor around the simple catafalque.

Also in accordance with his will, Mr. Sharett was buried in Tel Aviv's Old Cemetery next to the graves of his brothers-in-law; and close friends: Eliahu Golomb, founder and leader of the Haganah, the Jewish underground during the British occupation of Palestine; and Dov Hos, a Zionist leader.

For fifteen years before the birth of Israel, Mr. Sharett made history mainly as the official responsible for Israel's foreign relations. He was in effect foreign minister of the shadow cabinet of the embryo Jewish State, as head of the Political Department of the Zionist Executive, and presented his people's case in the chancelleries of the world and before international bodies.

These were years of frustration and heartache with rare moments of encouragement. But when the United Nations voted in 1947 to partition Palestine into Jewish and Arab states, Mr. Sharett's prestige was at its peak.

On returning from New York to Tel Aviv in 1948 to sign the Proclamation of Independence, crowds cheering followed him from the Tel Aviv Museum to the home of his aged mother in Rothschild Boulevard, says the New York Times, where he walked after the historic ceremony. On that day, when the Israeli Government became official, Mr. Sharett slipped naturally into the office of Foreign Minister which he held until 1956. But he continued to experience frustrations.

At home, he was under crossfire from leftists criticizing his pro-Western orientation and by irredentists opposing his moderation with the Arabs. However, that period was also full of compensation and moments of elation, as when Mr. Sharett led his government's delegation to Lake Success, N. Y., to accept United Nations membership in 1949.

After a stormy debate, fierce with Arab opposition, Israel was voted in, 37 to 12, and Mr. Sharett rose to pledge the country's "loyalty to the fundamental principles" of the charter. "We enter this Assembly in a spirit of humility, anxious for guidance and enlightenment," he said.

The next day, at an emotional ceremony outside United Nations headquarters, as the singing of "Hatikvah," the Israeli anthem, as the blue-and-white Israeli flag, bearing the Star of David, took its place among the flags of the world.

"This Star of David, which has been used by our oppressors, which we have carried with us in our trials and tribulations, which accompanied our pioneers when they broke new ground in the wilderness, this flag, which has been a rallying point for the forces of Jewish people struggling to achieve the liberation in our ancestral home is now marking our full emancipation," he declared.

The happy period ended abruptly. Mr. Ben-Gurion re-assumed the helm in 1955 after Mr. Sharett had served as Premier for two years. Mr. Ben-Gurion lost patience with the equivocations of his temperate and cautious Foreign Minister. He served notice that one or the other must go, and Mr. Sharett accordingly resigned.

The statesmanlike and dignified manner in which he stepped down earned Mr. Sharett renewed admiration and esteem. He received warm ovations whenever he appeared publicly, says the New York Times. He retained his seat in Parliament and continued to be active in the Mapai party, but assiduously declined august state appointments. He became head of Am Oved, the General Labor Federation's publishing house.

In 1959, he assumed the chairmanship of the World Zionist Executive and finally found a satisfying outlet for his abilities. He applied himself to his new post with zeal, attempting to breathe new life into the movement that has been flagging since its goal of creating a Jewish state had been reached.

A polished linguist of great personal charm and urbane courtesy, Mr. Sharett became even better known around the world as he traveled extensively, trying to persuade Zionists that they still had a vital function recruiting young blood for the movement and promoting Hebrew education in the Diaspora.

Mr. Sharett was born in Kherson, in the Ukraine, and was brought to Turkish-ruled Palestine at the age of 12. His father, Yaakov Tchertok, was a member of Bilu, a Russian-Jewish organization dedicated to agricultural colonization of Palestine.

The family changed its name to Shertok in Palestine and after the establishment of Israel, to Sharett, Hebrew for "serve".

In line with Bilu ideals, the family's first home in Palestine was a farm in a remote Arab village in the hills of Ephraim. The venture was an economic disaster and in 1909 the family moved to Ahuzat Bait, a suburb of Jaffa that was to develop into the city of Tel Aviv.

During the two years the young immigrant spent on the farm, he mastered Arabic and studied his neighbors' customs and morals, gaining knowledge that was to influence his career.

Mr. Sharett was in the first graduating class of the Herzlia Gymnasium in Tel Aviv. While there, he joined a semi-clandestine idealistic clique that pledged its members to choose occupations that would benefit the Jewish community in Palestine.

Most of the members became farmers. Mr. Sharett was chosen to go to Istanbul to study law and equip himself to defend Palestine Jews against abuses by corrupt Ottoman officials.

His law studies were interrupted by World War I, and Mr. Sharett had to decide between going underground, risking detention as a Czarist subject or becoming an Ottoman citizen and joining the army. He chose the latter and was commissioned an officer.

For his extraordinary linguistic abilities he was assigned as interpreter for a high ranking German officer commanding a Turkish unit, says the New York Times. In that post, he traveled widely and became familiar with the region.

After the war and Britain's Balfour Declaration that pledged the establishment of a Jewish national home, Mr. Sharett went to London and enrolled in the School of Economics and Political Science. He paid his way by working as a translator and giving Hebrew lessons. He was also active in Zionist affairs then.

In 1925, when the General Federation of Labor started its daily, Davar, Mr. Sharett was called back to Tel Aviv to join the editorial staff. Davar initiated an English-language supplement in 1929, and Mr. Sharett became editor.

His work attracted the attention of Chaim Arlosoroff, head of the Political Department of the Zionist Executive, who invited him to join his staff. Mr. Sharett became Mr. Arlosoroff's right-hand man, particularly in relations with Arabs.

During that period, Mr. Sharett developed a warm relationship with Emir Abdullah of Trans-Jordan, later the king. A Persian rug presented to him by the Arab ruler was one of his most-treasured possessions.

Mr. Arlosoroff was murdered on the Tel Aviv seashore in 1933 and later that year the Zionist Congress elected Mr. Sharett to succeed him. Thus, at 37, he entered the front rank of Zionist leadership.

In addition to the history he helped to mold, Mr. Sharett left his imprint on the Hebrew language. He coined scores of new words and used the prestige of his official positions to spur their widespread use. He was also instrumental in getting other people's creations adopted.

He was fluent in Hebrew, English, Russian, French, German, Turkish, Arabic and Yiddish. He translated poetry from several languages into Hebrew and also wrote two books.

He is survived by his widow, Zippora Meirov, whom he married when they were students in London; two sons, Yaakov, and Haim; and a daughter, Mrs. Yael Medini, who was educated at Barnard College in New York; a sister, Yehuda Sharett, the Israeli composer; and eight grandchildren.

Israel was his life from his earliest years. When he was not yet old enough to read or write, his father, Jacob, a farmer in Russia, would stand him before a map of the Holy Land and point out to him where Joseph was thrown into the pit, where the Canaanites dwelled, and where King David ruled.

And, as a boy of eleven, arrived in the Holy Land with his family, emigres from Russia, Moshe Sharett would tend his father's flocks on the Samarian hills, says the New York Herald Tribune, and dream of the homeland for the Jews that he knew would one day arise.

Mr. Sharett was born Moshe Shertok in Kherson, the Ukraine.

At Kutsher's, the night life is as big as you want it to be.

At Kutsher's, you can dance all night long to 4 bands. Cry all night long with singers of sad songs (why is love so sad? Can someone tell me — write Milton Kutsher). Laugh all night long at some of television's funniest comedians. Or you can sit at the bar with a friend all night long and make friends with Don Lazar, our chief bartender. (He's very easy to make friends with — after which, he pours drinks like you were his personal guest . . . he's gotta go.) And you can do all this at 2 nightclubs, one brand new. So if you and your wife have a fight, you can tell each other where to go. (To the other night club.) Of course we've got dozens of daytime sports and activities not to mention our 18 hole champion golf course. But you're tired, now, aren't you? You've been up all night carousing . . . You're sleepy . . . wake up Lenny . . . Lenny, wake up . . . It's time for dinner . . . Lenny . . . Lenny . . .

INSTEAD OF NAZI VIOLENCE IN TORONTO PARK, SPEAKER TURNS OUT TO BE NON-NAZI GRADUATE STUDENT IN PHILOSOPHY

More than 50 policemen — including Chief James Mackey — guarded Allan Gardens against a mob disturbance that never came, says Toronto Globe and Mail. They feared an outburst of mistaken violence when Donald John Black, 24, a non-Nazi, carried out his announced plan of speaking publicly against the city bylaw that was invoked to bar William John Beattie, self-styled Canadian Nazi leader, from holding an outdoor meeting.

Mr. Beattie did not appear, and there was no repetition of the May 30 anti-Nazi riot that was touched off by his presence.

Instead, many listeners in the crowd of 300 applauded when Mr. Black, flushed of face and nervous, delivered an appeal for unlicensed free speech within the present legal limits.

The young University of Toronto graduate student in philosophy, who made clear that he was no Nazi and had no political affiliations, stood with his back to an elm tree, took the sunvisors off his rimless glasses and talked quietly about freedom of speech. His hearers — many of them reporters and photographers — crowded close to him on the grass. Some radio reporters thrust microphones at him.

Gaining confidence as he warmed to the subject in what he said was his first public speech, he spoke and answered questions for about 20 minutes, then strolled away hand-in-hand with his wife, while reporters carried on a running conversation with him and photographers kept snapping his picture. He wore a brown jacket, open-necked plaid shirt, and light khaki pants.

Mr. Beattie walked quickly through Allan Gardens the day he had vainly asked permission to speak there.

Unsmiling and holding the arm of his well-dressed blond wife, he failed to provoke anything but a few shouted epithets and the movement of a curious crowd of fewer than 500 to the southeast corner of the park at Gerrard Street East and Sherbourne Street, where he was hustled into a taxi by police. One policeman said later: "He was scared."

Mr. Beattie wore a grey suit and carried a small hand-printed sign that read: I Demand Freedom. He was halfway across Allan Gardens before he was recognized.

Police quickly closed in to protect him and his wife but said later that there were few persons present of those who earlier protested anti-Semitic Nazi propaganda.

Thirty minutes before Mr. Black was due to speak, a police sound truck pulled up on Gerrard Steet East south of the park. Clusters of uniformed constables at the four corners of Allan Gardens moved slowly toward the swelling crowd. Senior officers moved in closer. Plainclothesmen and detectives, singly and in pairs, mingled with the crowd.

The riot squad truck slid to the curb and parked unnoticed on Carlton Street to the north of the park. Paddy wagons patrolled nearby.

Chief Mackey sat shirt-sleeved on a park bench. On the same bench two oldtimers were engrossed in their game of chess, watched by three others. On another bench two men played checkers. None of them noticed or recognized Chief Mackey.

A reporter spoke to the police chief. It irritated him. "Why don't you just go on about your business," he snapped.

Deputy Police Chief Samuel Johnson and Staff Inspector Harold Adamson, in charge of the riot squad, strolled along a park path.

As Mr. Black walked without speaking along the asphalt path from the centre of the park, past the greenhouses to the northwest corner near Jarvis Street, the main body of the crowd followed closely. Six mounted constables and an inspector rode their horses out of a horse-trailer parked behind one of the greenhouses. They took up posts 50 yards from the tree chosen by Mr. Black, as the crowd circled him.

The police sound truck moved closer, and at least 20 constables patrolled in pairs. Fifteen detectives, most from divisional headquarters at Regent Street, joined members of the homicide squad and mixed with the group of listeners. Staff Inspector Adolphus Payne of detective headquarters stood three feet away from the elm tree where Mr. Black spoke.

Detectives from the Criminal Investigation Branch, armed with movie and still cameras, photographed faces in the crowd.

"My point is a very simple one, a fundamental one," Mr. Black told the audience under the elm tree. "It is the bylaw and the amendment to the bylaw . . . that gives the council the arbitrary right to decide who shall and who shall not . . . speak in a public park.

"This is an infringement of all our civil rights."

He said he had received threatening telephone calls because of newspaper reports that described him wrongly as a supporter of Mr. Beattie.

He said his only campaign was against the bylaw approved June 21 by City Council, ordering the city parks commissioner to send forward contentious applications for permits to speak in the parks to the Parks and Recreation Committee for decision and recommendation to council.

"No person should be denied the right to speak by a bylaw that is flimsy, unjust, and inadequate," he said.

"Being a Nazi is not, in this country, illegal yet. Beattie hasn't, as far as I know, been arrested for being a Nazi . . . Because some of us feel it ought to be illegal, there is no excuse to step outside the law."

In answer to questions from reporters, he said later: "If Beattie were in the park, I wouldn't come anywhere near here, and this is what I would strongly advise anyone else to do. Beattie so far has been ridiculous, and the only thing to do is to keep him that way."

SHARETT: A CHIEF ARCHITECT OF THE STATE OF ISRAEL

The name Shertok meant "little devil" in Russian, and Mr. Sharett was known by this name until, like many other Israeli officials, he changed to a Hebrew name after Israeli independence. His Hebrew name, Mr. Sharett once said, means "a servant of the people."

Mr. Sharett's father, Jacob Shertok, was one of the first modern Zionists to settle in Palestine. In 1882, he went from Russia to the Holy Land, then a part of the decaying Ottoman Empire. He returned to Russia in 1886; twenty years later he went back to Palestine, this time with his family.

The Shertoks farmed in an Arab village north of Jerusalem and young Moshe represented the family at Arab ceremonies, becoming fluent in Arabic and something of an authority on Arab affairs.

The Shertoks moved to Jaffa, where Moshe attended Herzliah Gymnasium, the first modern Hebrew secondary school in Palestine, and was a member of its first graduating class in 1913. He then went to study law at the Imperial Ottoman University at Constantinople (now Istanbul) and at the outbreak of World War I was drafted into the Turkish Army, in which he rose to lieutenant.

In 1924, after studying at the London School of Economics, Mr. Sharett returned to Palestine and worked for Davar, of Tel Aviv, the first modern daily newspaper in the Middle East and the organ of the Palestine Labor party. He edited its first English edition and served as editor of the paper from 1929 to 1931.

He was an erudite man with a wide knowledge of history. At the UN, he frequently looked sad. "When Sharett looks said," said a man who observed him from time to time, "it is impossible to tell whether it is because of something that happened just a minute ago or 2,000 years ago".

His role and his ideas in Palestine's political life were compared by Palestine Jews to those of Clement Attlee in the British Labor party.

With Mr. Ben-Gurion and Eliezer Kaplan, who later became the Israeli Finance Minister, Mr. Sharett conceived and promoted the idea, says the New York Herald Tribune of the collective farm settlements (kibbutzim), which were later planted by the hundreds in Palestine.

The plight of the Jews worsened into a world crisis with the Nazi persecutions of the early 1930s. To aggravate matters, the British in 1939 put severe limits on migration to Palestine. Mr. Sharett traveled widely, arguing the Zionist cause wherever he went.

He was fond of literature, the theater, music, and food. He indulged his liking for the first three. With the last he was not so lucky. He had ulcers.

Mr. Sharett worked to get Jews out of Nazi hands and into Palestine. In 1943 he came to the U. S. and pressed on officials his view that two million Jews could be absorbed in Palestine. In 1946, Mr. Sharett was one of four Jewish Agency executives among 2,600 Palestinian Jews detained by the British in Latrun concentration camp in Palestine for five months without formal charges or a trial. He taught economics and Hebrew to fellow prisoners and once went on a hunger strike.

Throughout the period of turbulence in Palestine, Mr. Sharett opposed the terrorist activities in Palestine of the Stern Gang and the Irgun Zvai Leumi, small underground armies.

The principal achievements of Israeli diplomacy in the early years of Mr. Sharett's tenure as Foreign Minister were membership in the U.N.; economic aid from the U. S.; the 1950 tripartite declaration by the U. S., Britain, and France, guaranteeing the territorial status quo in the Middle East, and West German reparations to Israel.

Israel moved from what seemed to be a neutralist posture to identification as a Western nation as the Soviet Union grew increasingly hostile to Israel and friendly to Arab claims. In 1950 Mr. Sharett declared that Israel was neutral not because she had chosen democracy over Communism but because she had "non-identified" with either power bloc in the cold war.

In effect, he was roving ambassador and Foreign Minister of the unborn state, trying to marshal material and spiritual support for it wherever he could find it, says the New York Herald Tribune. Along with Mr. Ben-Gurion, Israel's first Prime Minister, Mr. Sharett had been the leader of the Social Democratic Mapai party, the country's largest.

But the ancient friendship of the two was broken in 1956 when Mr. Ben-Gurion ousted him as Foreign Minister and Mr. Sharett left the government. Mr. Ben-Gurion, it was said, had believed Mr. Sharett too cautious, too moderate, in the struggle with the Arabs, and it was not long after Mr. Sharett left the Cabinet that, under Mr. Ben-Gurion's leadership, Israel, together with Britain and France, attacked Egypt.

And not long ago Mr. Sharett, still a Deputy in Israel's Parliament, the Knesset, was wheeled onto the floor and spoke out against Mr. Ben-Gurion.

In World War II, Mr. Sharett finally succeeded in persuading the British that a brigade of Palestinian Jews should be enlisted in the British Army to fight against Hitler under the blue and white Zionist banner.

"The Continent has become a graveyard for Europe's Jews," Mr. Sharett said. "Give the Jews of Palestine a chance to make it a battleground!"

Prime Minister Winston Churchill gave his consent to Mr. Sharett's pleas, and Mr. Sharett was responsible for the enlistment of 33,000 Palestinian Jews to fight in the British Army in the Middle East, North Africa and Europe. It was these troops who later provided Israel with the nucleus for an army.

A tense emotional little man named Moshe Sharett once stood in the delegates' lounge of the United Nations, then at Lake Success, L. I. "There will be a partition even if I have to do it with my two hands," he said.

This was in 1947, a year before Israel was born, and Mr. Sharett was the leader of the Israeli group trying to force a partition of Palestine and the creation of the new state.

In a joint statement last week the Israeli government, the Knesset, and the World Zionist Organization said:

"The Jewish people have been deprived of a leader of the state, a pilot of the movement, and a teacher of the nation. One of the true nobility of the House of Israel has gone to his eternal rest."

In Tel Aviv Mr. Sharett was eulogized in a one-hour address by his old friend, David Ben-Gurion. "His name will never be forgotten in the Jewish people's history." Mr. Ben-Gurion said. Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Zionist Organization, says the New York Herald Tribune, described Mr. Sharett as "the greatest Jewish leader of our generation."

Jewish organizations around the world mourned Mr. Sharett's death. Among them was the American Jewish Congress whose president, Dr. Joachim Prinz, of New York, said in a statement: "We join Jews everywhere and the people of the State of Israel in mourning the untimely passing of this giant of our times and titan in Jewish history."

In 1945, he was one of the eighteen original members of the Friends of Haganah, organized by former Premier David Ben-Gurion of Israel, says the New York Herald Tribune, and was a member of the special committee of the Jewish Agency which studied the problems facing the Zionist movement after the creation of the State of Israel.

He is a founding member of the board of governors of the State of Israel Bond Drive and a member of the executive committee of the United Israel Appeal.

Mr. Weisman, new head of the executive committee, was national chairman of the United Jewish Appeal in 1948 and 1949; during the preceding three years, he was chairman of the United Israel Appeal. He has served as vice-president of the ZOA and chairman of the American Zionist Youth Commission. He is the author of the book, "The Future of Palestine," published in 1938.

The convention closed its business sessions with the adoption of a series of policy resolutions dealing with the Middle East, Israel, and world Jewry. Among them was one calling upon the U.S. Government to strengthen Israel's security by supplying arms to prevent military imbalance in the Middle East.

Cooler Israel, With Little Choice, Accepts Bonn Envoy

The Israeli Cabinet gave tacit approval to the appointment of Dr. Rolf Pauls, a former German Army officer, as West Germany's first Ambassador to Israel.

It decided at its weekly meeting to leave the matter to the Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir. The move meant that the Cabinet had not expressed disapproval of the appointment, says the New York Times. The Foreign Affairs and Security Committee of the Knesset also decided neither to approve nor to reject the candidacy of Dr. Pauls, a career diplomat.

Objections to the nomination of Dr. Pauls had been raised in the Knesset, or Parliament, and in most Israeli newspapers. Government officials said privately that they would have preferred someone with an anti-Nazi record or someone who was too young to have fought in World War II.

The Foreign Ministry has said that as far as can be learned Dr. Pauls was not a Nazi and is reported to have even worked against the Nazis. Officials in Israel express the view that Bonn gave them little choice in accepting Dr. Pauls. To reject him now, they say, would cripple the developing relations between the two countries.

The Government has done everything possible to treat the nomination in routine fashion. The Cabinet's decision to let the Foreign Ministry make the decision follows normal procedure. The arguments against Dr. Pauls have been mostly emotional, says the New York Times. Critics have said that Germany showed little tact in selecting a war veteran.

JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE NAMES NEW EXECUTIVE HEAD

Edward M. M. Warburg, chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee, announced that Charles H. Jordan, of Geneva, has been named executive head of the welfare agency, with the title of director-general. Mr. Jordan succeeds Moses A. Leavitt, JDC executive vice-chairman, who died in Geneva on June 21. Mr. Jordan will be in charge of JDC's work on behalf of needy Jews in thirty countries. The designation was made at a special meeting of the administration committee. Mr. Jordan will continue to maintain his headquarters in Geneva, but will be coming to New York for frequent consultations.

Serving under Mr. Jordan, Mr. Warburg reported, will be Herbert Katzki as deputy director-general in Geneva; and Samuel L. Haber as deputy director-general in New York. Miss Dorothy L. Speiser, assistant treasurer, will assume additional duties as secretary.

"Moses A. Leavitt was a man of unique gifts", Mr. Warburg declared. "His extraordinary contributions affected the lives of hundreds of thousands of men, women and children in all parts of the world. His name will be remembered with affection and gratitude not only by those who benefit from his efforts, but by all those who worked with him through the years.

"It has been JDC's good fortune that for the past ten years Charles Jordan has been its director-general overseas. Because of Mr. Jordan's vast experience in assisting refugees and the needy, his advice and counsel has been sought by governmental and intergovernmental bodies, as well as other voluntary agencies. He has our full support in the difficult task which lies ahead of him."

JDC, major American agency aiding needy Jews abroad, receives the bulk of its funds from the United Jewish Appeal. Its 1965 programs are budgeted at $28,853,500.

Mr. Jordan has served as chief operations officer since he was named director-general for overseas operations in 1955. He served for four years before that as assistant director-general. He joined the staff in 1941 as director of the Caribbean area with headquarters in Havana, Cuba. He served in the United States Navy during World War II and rejoined the JDC in 1945 as director of Far Eastern activities. In 1948 Mr. Jordan was back in Paris in charge of the emigration department which was responsible for the emigration of hundreds of thousands of surviving Jews from the DP camps.

In 1959 Mr. Jordan was named a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor by the French Government, in recognition of services on behalf of refugees who had found haven in France. He was also named co-chairman of the international committee for World Refugee Year in 1960. He served two terms as president of the Standing Conference of Voluntary Agencies Working for Refugees, composed of national and international voluntary agencies.

Mr. Jordan was born in Philadelphia and received his education at the University of Berlin, and the Pennsylvania and New York schools of social work. He is a charter member of the National Association of Social Workers and is chairman of the recently organized European Unit. He was also appointed in 1961 executive secretary of the International Council of Jewish Social and Welfare Services.

Herbert Katzki first joined the JDC staff in New York in 1936. He has served the welfare agency overseas since 1939, except for military service during World War II. He was named assistant director-general in 1951. Mr. Katzki was born in Elizabeth, New Jersey, and was graduated from New York University in 1930.

Samuel L. Haber joined the staff in 1947 as country director for the American Zone of Germany. Subsequently he served as country director for Morocco and as JDC representative in Poland. He became assistant director-general in 1958, and was named assistant executive vice-chairman in 1964, serving in JDC's New York headquarters. He served in the United States Army from 1943-46, rising to the rank of Major.

After serving in the New York headquarters of the JDC, Miss Dorothy L. Speiser was assigned overseas in 1938 to assist General Morris C. Troper, chairman of the European Executive Council of the JDC. She returned to New York in 1939 and was named assistant comptroller in 1948; and was elected assistant treasurer in 1951.

MAYOR OF BAMBERG

Germany's F.B.I. — to track down the culprits. The vigilante patrols were set up, and they are still in action from dusk to sunrise.

Five thousand Bambergers turned out in a heavy rainstorm to attend an atonement rally in the square before the 700-year-old Gothic cathedral. "Never before have these cathedral bells sounded so full of heavy and bitter accusations as today," said Mayor Mathieu, reports the New York Times. "But the citizens of Bamberg have nothing in common with these deeds. I beg our Jewish fellow-citizens not to condemn their townsmen as a whole."

"It was just a few crazy ones who did it," says Isaac Rosenberg. "Everyone I know — and I know even a few former S.S. men — has told me how he deplored it. I was at the rally, and I heard a man there say, 'They're out to hang the ones who did it.'" Bamberg's handful of Jews were talking about getting out of town — emigrating. But no one has left, and none is now likely to go.

Mr. Rosenberg, the only member of a family of eight to survive the gas chambers of Auschwitz, settled in Bamberg fourteen years ago, the year his son was born.

"I thought I would find peace in a Catholic city," the short, slight Jewish businessman said. "I must say that not once in his fourteen years has my son suffered by reason of the fact that his father is a Jew."

Mindful of that record and the shamed reaction of Bamberg to the events of the last weeks, Mr. Rosenberg and his fellow-Jews have not acted on that first impulse to pack their belongings. They must take into account, however, that more smearing could well take place. Despite intensive police efforts, there have been no arrests.

The City Hall still gets anonymous telephone calls, ostensibly from the anti-Semites who have so gravely damaged Bamberg's image. The latest caller said. "This is to advise you that when we are finished in Bamberg, Wurzburg is our next target city."

The police believe they are dealing with a hoodlum gang eager to give itself an aura of importance, and the neighboring city has put special security measures in effect. Mayor Mathieu told the Bamberg City Council that the investigation was making progress. He said there was hope that arrests would eventually be made.

The police believe the culprits are to be found in the ranks of the right radical movement that shakily survives in post-war Germany and elsewhere in Europe, says the New York Times. In the West German republic there is a welter of such groups, constantly splitting and reforming, but always adding up to a few thousand fanatics.

Bamberg and the surrounding Franconian area belong to the heartland of German conservatism with an ancient tradition of anti-Semitism.
